It was the time 23, and the world stood on the brink of battle. The United States and China, the pair of superpowers, were locked in a intense contest, vying for assets, influence, and supremacy. They had created sophisticated armaments, like laser weapons, drones, and satellites, which could hit any location, any time. They had clandestinely constructed orbital stations, which could fire nuclear missiles, that can destroy the earth. They were prepared to utilize these weapons, if ever necessary. But they were not the sole ones. There existed a third power, a hidden force, which had been watching them both, waiting patiently for them both, preparing for them both. They were the extraterrestrials, and they had come to halt them both. They had come to save the globe, or to end it. They had come to initiate the space wars that changed past.

The work "Analyzing Casual Conversation" by Suzanne Eggins and Diana Slade, first issued in 1997, establishes a systematic model for the examination and description of casual conversation in English. The writers argue that despite its occasionally aimless look and apparently unstructured material, casual conversation is a very structured undertaking and performs a crucial function in the social formation of reality. The book proceeds through real samples of casual conversations including participants differing in age, gender, ethnicity, and socio-economic class¹². Drawing on perspectives from sociology, linguistics, and critical semiotics, the publication furnishes readers with the analytical skills to describe the layers of structure and critical interpretive frameworks to elucidate the 'social work' that occurs on through chat.
