Screening of Newborns for Congenital Hypothyroidism

2005 Bradford L. Therrell Congenital hypothyroidism, when undiagnosed or if there is a lack of proper treatment management, results in an unnecessary health, economic and social burden. Formalized screening programs to detect congenital hypothyroidism in newborn infants, and its timely treatment, can prevent lifelong human suffering caused by severe mental retardation. With the involvement of the IAEA, such screening programs have been introduced successfully in a large number of countries. However, in many other countries such programs have not yet been established. This publication is intended to assist these countries in establishing and sustaining a comprehensive screening system for newborns, and draws on experience gained over more than a decade. It provides information for making sound screening policy decisions and describes how a newborn screening system should be set up, offering guidance on assessing the quality of the system. The intended result is that more successful programs will be established, bringing about a significant improvement in child health care worldwide.--Publisher's description.

The work "ANALYZING CASUAL CONVERSATION" by Suzanne Eggins and Diana Slade, originally issued in 1997, creates a methodical model for the examination and depiction of casual conversation in English. The scholars argue that notwithstanding its occasionally aimless seeming and apparently unstructured content, casual conversation is a extremely structured activity and has a crucial part in the social construction of reality. The book proceeds through genuine samples of casual conversations involving participants diverging in age, gender, ethnicity, and socio-economic class 12. Drawing on insights from sociology, linguistics, and critical semiotics, the work provides readers with the examinative skills to describe the levels of structure and critical interpretive frameworks to clarify the 'social work' that goes on through chat.
