The Maltreatment of Children

2012-12-06 S.M. Smith The maltreatment of children is an issue that has always been with us and civilized societies provide a range of services both social and medical to care for the children and families afflicted. In recent years, greater attention has been drawn to the medical aspects by competent authorities in the fields of forensic medicine, forensic psychiatry, epidemiological psychiatry, child psychiatry and family psychiatry; as well as the social aspects by those child welfare and child care agencies who have the difficult and distasteful task of removing children, with the help of the courts, from parents who can abuse them and are not able to care for them adequately. A multitude of social agencies, whose range of activities involve both the care and, where possible, the social betterment of afflicted families are now involved. Not least in importance is an increase in our global knowledge to help in the prevention or better treatment of these problems. This means more information on familial and genetic factors in human central nervous system development in its broadest sense. This would include how the central nervous system originates, mediates and controls the build up, speed of development and impulsive release, mastery and direction of aggressive drives and impulses. Very little is so far known about these factors.

Exploring Methods in Information Literacy Research

2007-06-01 Suzanne Lipu This book provides an overview of approaches to assist researchers and practitioners to explore ways of undertaking research in the information literacy field. The first chapter provides an introductory overview of research by Dr Kirsty Williamson (author of Research Methods for Students, Academics and Professionals: Information Management and Systems) and this sets the scene for the rest of the chapters where each author explores the key aspects of a specific method and explains how it may be applied in practice. The methods covered include those representing qualitative, quantitative and mixed methods. Both a chapter on the topical evidence-based practice approach, and another critiquing it, are also included. The final chapter points the way towards potential new directions for the burgeoning field. Renowned information literacy researcher Dr Christine Bruce affirms the usefulness of the book: 'New researchers and early career professionals will appreciate the clarity of the introductions provided' to each of the methods covered.

The publication "Analyzing Casual Conversation" by Suzanne Eggins and Diana Slade, originally published in 1997, creates an organized model for the analysis and portrayal of casual conversation in English. The scholars assert that despite its occasionally aimless appearance and apparently unstructured content, casual conversation is a highly structured task and performs a vital role in the social construction of reality. The work proceeds through real examples of casual conversations including participants differing in age, gender, ethnicity, and socio-economic class¹². Drawing on insights from sociology, linguistics, and critical semiotics, the work provides readers with the analytical skills to depict the levels of structure and critical interpretive frameworks to clarify the 'social work' that goes on through chat.
