Topics in Language Resources for Translation and Localisation

2008 Elia Yuste Rodrigo Language Resources (LRs) are sets of language data and descriptions in machine readable form, such as written and spoken language corpora, terminological databases, computational lexica and dictionaries, and linguistic software tools. Over the past few decades, mainly within research environments, LRs have been specifically used to create, optimise or evaluate natural language processing (NLP) and human language technologies (HLT) applications, including translation-related technologies. Gradually the infrastructures and exploitation tools of LRs are being perceived as core resources in the language services industries and in localisation production settings. However, some efforts ought yet to be made to raise further awareness about LRs in general, and LRs for translation and localisation in particular to a wider audience in all corners of the world. Topics in Language Resources for Translation and Localisation sets out to establish the state of the art of this ever expanding field and underscores the usefulness that LRs can potentially have in the process of creating, adapting, managing, standardising and leveraging content for more than one language and culture from various perspectives.

Real-life Applications with Membrane Computing

2017-04-05 Gexiang Zhang This book thoroughly investigates the underlying theoretical basis of membrane computing models, and reveals their latest applications. By studying various complex applications – including engineering optimization, power systems fault diagnosis, mobile robot controller design, and complex biological systems involving data modeling and process interactions – the book also extends the capabilities of membrane systems models with features such as formal verification techniques, evolutionary approaches, and fuzzy reasoning methods. As such, the book offers a comprehensive and up-to-date guide for all researchers, PhDs and undergraduate students in the fields of computer science, engineering and the bio-sciences who are interested in the applications of natural computing models.

The book "Analyzing Casual Conversation" by Suzanne Eggins and Diana Slade, originally issued in 1997, establishes a methodical model for the examination and description of casual conversation in English. The writers argue that notwithstanding its sometimes aimless look and ostensibly unstructured substance, casual conversation is an extremely structured activity and plays a critical part in the social building of reality. The publication goes through genuine examples of casual conversations including participants differing in age, gender, ethnicity, and socio-economic class. Deriving on understandings from sociology, linguistics, and critical semiotics, the publication provides readers with the examinative skills to depict the layers of structure and critical interpretive structures to explain the 'social work' that happens on through chat.
