Webforgiveness. You might think that's okay -- I don't. You might think it's okay that that campaign chairman offered polling data, campaign polling data, to someone linked to Russian Intelligence -- I don't think that's okay. You might think it's okay that the President himself called on Russia to hack his opponents' emails if they were "listening."

Webmyself had to do with the simple idea that "it's okay to be different." People who hold that "it's okay to be different" don't try to kill each other over moral or value differences. Looking at the world I realized that there are some religions, political and economic philosophies that have incorporated this simple idea.

WebThere is nothing wrong with grief. It's a natural extension of love. It's a healthy and sane response to loss. That grief feels bad doesn't make it bad; that you feel crazy doesn't mean you are crazy. Grief is part of love. Love for life, love for self, love for others. What you are living, painful as it is, is love. And love is really ...
